

The Garand Artifact Of My Family Past

This garand was used in the war and we might not have had freedom if he did not fight in the war. I am interested in war and it is something from my great grandpa. I don't remember much about him so it was cool he brought this home from World war 2. I want to learn more about my family's past. I want to know what guns they used back then. I wanted to learn more about the war.

The gun was brought home in 1945. It is currently in my grandpa's den where he keeps all his guns. If our family starts passing it down, I might inherit it. There might be a chance that one day it is the only one left in the world. It could have a special impact throughout history because it shows the change of weapons from WW2 to weapons now. I think it is important that we keep this item because it is special to our family by reminding of my great grandpa's service to our country.

Yes, I would like to see this artifact preserved because my great grandpa would like that. I think our family could learn something from back then. I think this is something all families should do because it is important to remember your ancestors. This gun could all of a sudden be the only one left in the world and it is something that you can't just find at an antique shop.
